

to the effects of global warming, completely run out of water.

Starring Cameron Daddo, Vince Colosimo, Rachel Carpani and Georgie Parker, the Scorched experience will include the most sophisticated and comprehensive cross-platform element yet created for a television event in this country. The interactive online component will launch in mid August, leading up to the tele-feature, which will be broadcast by the Nine Network later in the year.

Ellenor and Marcus engineered the cross-platform delivery of Scorched over two years, but according to the entrepreneurial couple, their most ambitious co-production to date is their daughter Elsie Lyla

Firelight Couple's Scorching Cross-Platform Production

While the Australian film industry has been struggling in recent years, a number of independent production companies have been popping up around the place and producing very good things. One such company is Firelight Productions, the brainchild of dynamic, young fronte couple Marcus Gillezeau and Ellenor Cox.

Marcus and Ellenor started Firelight eleven years ago in 1997, specialising in social political documentaries for international television.

Marcus is an innovator in digital media and cross-platform content creation - a storyteller who understands the importance of all-media creative concepts in the current screen content environment. His wife Ellenor's expertise lies in all-media screen content creation with specialised experience in financing and producing cross-platform delivery projects. Together they are a force to be reckoned with.

As Firelight Productions, Marcus and Ellenor are about to launch an exciting project that will revolutionise the way Australians watch TV - Scorched.

Produced by Goalpost Pictures Australia and Essential Media and Entertainment, in association with Firelight Productions, Scorched is a gripping 90 minute tele-feature that will be augmented by an extensive eight week online drama series that will lead into, provide clues for, and ultimately conclude the drama surrounding an ensemble of characters who find themselves engulfed by raging bushfires in a futuristic Sydney that has, due Gillezeau, who just recently turned five.

Interestingly enough, before they teamed up (in fact, before they'd even met), Marcus and Ellenor had some funny, destined-to-be-together coincidences - they were next door neighbours four times in their lives without knowing it (at least they lived in same street at the same time) and when Ellenor was working for Qantas in Tokyo, Marcus was there at exactly the same time and they have since realised that they attended the same networking events.

From all accounts it would appear the pair are destined for success. To find out more about the fruits of their labour and love you can visit www.firelight.com.au or www.scorched.tv after August 18th.
